It is investigated in this paper, whether the antigen (SAG) of schistosomula, isolated with the method of ethanol precipitation from the excretory-secretory material of schistosoma mansoni, possesses the immunoreactivity in schistosomiasis patients, groups of experimentally infected animals and in contacts with schistosome. A single Schistosoma mansoni isolate, S. brasiliensis isolate, (Genbank Acc. No. AF538301) has also been tested. Each isolate was mixed with human or sheep serum and precipitated in ethanol. The precipitate was dissolved in water and its immunoreactivity has been investigated in the system of immunoenzymatic assays. The immunoreactivity of the antigen in the system of the sera tested with the schistosomula and S. mansoni isolate was found out. A neutralization test with the antigen and antiserum to schistosome isolated from the human serum was carried out. In these tests the antigen was shown to neutralize the immune reaction of the human infected with schistosomiasis, and the antiserum-antigen complex was shown to neutralize the immune reaction of the sheep infected with schistosomiasis, and the antiserum-antigen complex was shown to neutralize the immune reaction of the human infected with schistosomiasis, and the antiserum-antigen complex to neutralize the immune reaction of the sheep infected with schistosomiasis. Liquid chromatographic assay for the simultaneous determination of aminoglycoside antibiotics in human blood and urine. A simple, precise liquid chromatographic assay is described for the simultaneous determination of five aminoglycoside antibiotics in human blood and urine. The plasma proteins are precipitated by zinc chloride treatment of blood and further removed by a simple solid-
